

How common is it?

Domestic violence is a serious problem which permeates every level of South African society. 30 percent of all the cases of violence reported to the South African Police Service are domestic in nature.

There are a number of mistaken ideas about domestic violence, including, only poor women get beaten, or that battered women ask for it.

In fact, violence within the home can happen to anybody!